What is your favourite Cheese? Shropshire Blue

What is your marital Status? Joyfully wedded to The Imp.

What is your preferred Alcoholic Beverage? Red wine produced by the Frenchies.

Briefly describe your best self-inflicted injury sustained whilst drunk, and the circumstances surrounding this event: After visiting my dear friend Count Simon last December, I thoroughly shafted my ankle whilst taking a spectacular tumble in his driveway. I can still use the pain to predict storms.

What, in your erudite opinion, is the Greatest Book Ever Written? War and Peace by Leo Tolstoy.

And what is your ideal choice for Bedtime Reading? Sharpe or Flashman.

In the realm of the motion picture, what would be your perfect Afternoon Matinee? A Tale of Two Cities - the version with Dirk Bogarde.

And for Late Night viewing? From Hell, with Johnny Depp and Heather Graham. Or Coppola's Dracula.

If forced for tax reasons to leave dear old Blighty, where would you choose to reside? An independent Yorkshire.

In the unlikely event of you being deprived of your vast unearned income, which of the professions would beckon? Scribe.

What, might I enquire, is your favourite work of Art? Hylas and the nymphs by Waterhouse. Ding Dong!

What, within the confines of good taste, is your favourite aroma? That of a fine cigar in an oak paneled library.

Blondes, or Brunettes? Absolutely. And redheads.

In the unfortunate event of your demise, which (living or deceased) performer or artistes would you engage for the wake/funeral? Elvis Presley, Vegas period.

And, in a similar vein, (perhaps), which historical figure would you most like to meet? Emily Bronte

As a man not only of refinement, but of action, what is your preferred sporting activity, either as participant or observer? The mysterious fighting arts of the Orient.

And finally, do you have a personal motto, and if so, what in God's name is it? "I Don't mind if I do"
